

Learn How to Pray With Fire!

For the Christian who desires to enter into a dynamic and powerful life of prayer, the Bible is loaded with teachings and models. The Lord's Prayer is probably the most well-known example, given directly from the lips of the Lord Jesus Christ as a pattern of prayer for His disciples. After that, the book of Psalms, prayer book and hymnal of the Old Testament, dominates the history and practice of prayer in the Church. There is another group of prayers, though, that is being recognized and restored in the worship and intercession movements of the new millennium. These are the powerful prayers offered up by the New Testament apostles.

"These are prayers to learn by heart," says Jeff Doles, author of Praying With Fire: Learning to Pray With Apostolic Power, a new book from Walking Barefoot Ministries. But when he talks about learning these prayers by heart, he does not mean that one should simply memorize them, although that can certainly be helpful.

"Memorization is learning with your mind," Jeff says. "Learning these prayers by heart means to meditate upon them, to begin praying them out for yourself, for your church, for your pastor, and for anyone else who needs a fresh work of God in their life. In this way, these prayers will become a guide for you, and a springboard that launches you out into a prayer experience that is both joyful and effective."

To help his readers in this process, Jeff has included a little commentary for each prayer in the book, followed by practical "action points."

Jeff Doles is a Bible teacher, worship leader and recording artist in the Central Florida area.
